What do we stand to lose?

It is indeed sad when you realise that your life in a European capital is not as safe as you thought. All of the sudden you realise that there are forces that threaten our way of life, people who are even willing to go so far as to murder to prove their point.

It is not unnatural to react to this by saying that they have put themselves outside of our community, even outside of the boundaries of our legal system. Some of us might feel it necessary to take away their nationality, their civil rights, to summarily lock them up and preferably throw away the key. So what if one or two innocents get hurt in the process? The needs of the many surely outweigh the rights of the few!

But this kind of reasoning is too easy, too shallow. The trap here is that in reacting this way, we throw away our own rights and trample our own values. Whatever we decide to do, we must protect the core values of our Western societies, like rule of law, right on privacy, freedom of speech,... or we will truly have lost our fight against terrorism.

The problem with terrorism is that the terrorist wants to make people scared to prove a point. In a reaction some politicians will make use of this scare to realize their own agenda and take away some liberties. This leads to new acts of violence and before long you are in a spiral of violence which ends either in anarchy or in a police state. Reacting too harshly against individual acts, makes us undermine our own way of life. This is what we stand to lose if we are not careful.

So if we do not want to throw away the achievements of the last 70-odd years in Europe – as described in the next article - we must continue works ever closer together for a more secure Europe! Learning and training together, like in the common modules, is an excellent way of achieving this.

Time to bid farewell

by Hans-Bernhard Weisserth, Head of the ESDC

Dear friends, dear colleagues, after two decades of active engagement in the development of CSDP, including one decade during which I have been responsible for the development and running of the European Security and Defence College, it is time to bid farewell.

Recently, while I was watching the latest news on the terrorist attacks and on the war in Ukraine on television, it occurred to me that throughout most of this period Europe has never been so prosperous, so secure, nor so free. The violence of the first half of the 20th century had given way to a period of peace and stability unprecedented in European history. The creation of the European Union has been central to this development.

Many of you will feel as though you have heard or read this text before. You are right. It is what we said in the introduction to the European Security Strategy document in 2003. For me, the new security situation in Europe today was therefore rather unthinkable. In a way, it was also unthinkable for me that one day during my military career, which started in 1973, the Berlin Wall would fall. Finally it did.

These landmark events have demonstrated to me that nothing in the European security situation can be considered a given for ever. On the contrary, we must constantly play our own active role for a prosperous, secure and free Europe, for "a secure Europe in a better world". I would hope that the title of the European Security Strategy of 2003 will also be used for a future strategy document, as it correctly describes the EU approach and today's security culture.

When it comes to the question of military defence, bearing in mind the numerous attempts made over the last two decades, it is also clear to me that – in order to overcome our deficiencies – the real solution can only lie in a strong European approach, embedded of course in an "effective and balanced partnership with the USA" (European Security Strategy), a goal which unfortunately we are still too far from reaching in my personal view.

In particular against the backdrop of the current security situation, proper European defence also requires a discussion on the issue of collective defence among the 28 Member States. Developing a political Union cannot exclude the clarification of this important aspect. Ultimately we will need to discuss this at an appropriate time. Of course, we all understand the sensitivity of this issue, and the question of how to tackle it will require time and careful consideration at the highest political level.

However, at "working level" we should forge ahead in improving our defence cooperation, at least among those Member States who are ready to do so – and my impression is that the majority of the Member States do. Some meaningful pooling and sharing initiatives demonstrate this. However, the Europeanisation of our military must also start at the beginning of the military careers of our officers.

This is why I am very much in favour of the European initiative launched in 2008 by the then French presidency for the exchange of young officers during the initial phase of their training – an initiative inspired by Erasmus. It is an excellent platform for discussing related problems and organising practical exchange opportunities.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all those who have been involved in the work of the Implementation Group so far, as Chairpersons and as active national representatives and experts. Many thanks for your exemplary personal commitment. Of course, there is much room for further improvement of our work and initiatives, with the particular aim of intensifying our exchanges. Therefore, I would like to encourage you all not only to remain committed but to do your utmost to intensify your cooperation using "Erasmus militaire" as a platform. The development of an IT platform replacing this newsletter will definitely be a significant step forward and will help improve communication.

Together with you I remain committed to Europe – it is our future!

Common Module on CSDP 2015 at the Theresan Military Academy in Wiener Neustadt

Author: Maciej Pastor / Polish student of the National Defence University in Warsaw and participant of the Austrian international semester

Between 12th and 16th of January, 2015 a Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) Module took place at the Theresan Military Academy in Austria. The European initiative for the exchange of young officers inspired by Erasmus was again a fruitful cooperation of Military Academies from Czech Republic, Estonia, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Lithuania, Poland, Romania and Austria as a host. Moreover the module was opportunity also for civilian students to gain experience and work in an international environment with Cadets in order to build up a better understanding for each other.

It is worth to mention that the Course Director, Col Dr. Harald Gell, invited instructors and lecturers from the international community. Representatives from Czech Republic, Estonia, Poland, Romania and United Kingdom as well as high-level persons from Austria were invited to teach theory as well as practice.

2/4

On Monday, 12th of January – among excitement and fears – the Module started. There were reasons to be optimistic like gaining new experience and discover new areas of knowledge and in some cases even future interest in further exploration. But there were also reasons to be aware if everyone can communicate and find connection and if multinational groups can cooperate effectively not even mentioning if civilian-military combination can give positive results. However, the very first day brought ice break and show the week will be productive and against any fear and stereotypes became great memory for all of us. We were not disappointed. First day started with history of institutions of the EU and guided tour of the Academy. The place has special meaning because it is the oldest Military Academy of the world and reminds us that we belong to a great tradition which we have to pass on.

The Evening was also very promising. A big sport competition was organized and unusual disciplines were prepared which created a lot of fun. A good idea was a key for success as well as team work which brought us together more closely. After that everyone went to the students' party where we celebrated the winners of the sport competition. Everyone had a chance to chat and to know each other better.

The following days brought us new challenges. All were divided into syndicates and had special tasks which requested cooperation among the different nations. The results of a syndicate depended on each member's work. Despite complexity of issues this exercise developed soft skills and allowed better to understand subjects like human rights or capability development. Between the briefings prepared by the team-leaders some theoretical lectures took place, among them overviews on situations in Afghanistan and Chad and their connection to the European Union. It was a great opportunity to talk with people who had combat experience in missions and operations abroad. In doing so is for sure easier if we know whom or what we are fighting together with brothers from different countries of the European Union.

On Wednesday all the participants visited UNHQ in Vienna. The place was amazing – one city within another bigger one where you could see representatives from all over the world. The presence of Cadets in elegant uniforms in different colors draw attention also from some tourists. Two guides explained how UN works. Later on we had a lecture about EU-UN relations which was too short for such a huge topic but clear enough to give us an idea of EU cooperation with other organizations. This trip was a great chance to increase our intercultural competences.

To sum up, the CSDP-Module was well organized and everything was planned with the highest manner. It might be that the Austrian experience in organizing Common Modules in such a way has an important impact in maximizing effectiveness of the learning process. No negative events happened and we could proceed without any disturbance. The CSDP-Module allowed participants to expand their knowledge about the EU and its security issues. Multinationality and cooperation between civilian and military counterparts was a great benefit. The understanding between civilian universities and military academies allowed also find people considered being so different but being able to cooperate. There is no doubt; the CSDP-Module was worth to participate.
